Intelcan Wins Exporter of the Year 2004

Ottawa, ON, Canada – December 3, 2004 -- Intelcan, a leading global provider of Air Traffic Management (ATM) systems and airport infrastructure, proudly announced today that it won the 2004 Exporter of the Year award at the Ottawa Business Achievement Awards gala held last night. Intelcan was selected for this prestigious honour due to its year-over-year business growth, commitment to customer and community success, and its industry excellence in the international marketplace.

"It's a tremendous achievement for Intelcan to receive the Exporter of the Year award," said Mark Whittall, Intelcan Chairman and CEO. "It's a clear indication that the company continues to deliver value and demonstrable return on investment to its customers. Our customers rely on our innovative technology and customized solutions to drive the successful performance required in the air traffic management industry. This award clearly shows that Intelcan continues to maintain a leadership position in and outside of Canada as our company positions itself for further growth and diversification of our business."

In addition to the Ottawa Business Achievement Awards Exporter of the Year award, Intelcan was recently a finalist at the Canadian Innovation Awards in the category of Diversification of Export Markets.
